The Montgomery County Public Art Survey Help Curate Montgomery County!

The Arts and Humanities Council of Montgomery County is embarking on a "Roadmap" process that will chart new directions for public art in the County – where it should be located, what types of projects should be developed, and how it should foster community life, economic vitality and cultural diversity. Montgomery County residents are asked to share their thoughts regarding public art projects in communities throughout the County via an online survey.

If you care about public art, about the look and feel of public spaces, or about the County's creative sector, this is an important opportunity for you to lend your voice to the discussion about what directions public art will take in Montgomery County.
